EQUALITY

The issue that must be confronted is human fragility, the inclination to close ourselves off in our own narrow interests. That is why we need an economy with goals beyond the narrow focus on growth, that puts human dignity, jobs and ecological regeneration at its core. The dignity of our peoples demands an economy that doesn't merely enable the accumulation of goods, but allows all to access good work, housing, education, and health.

In the absence of social goals, "profit-first" economic growth has fed a crony capitalism that serves not the common good but speculators in the "liquid economy". Collateral banking systems, offshore sites providing fiscal havens for corporate tax avoidance, extracting value from companies to boost the earnings of shareholders at the expense of stake holders, the smoke-and-mirrors world of derivatives and credit default swaps—all these suck capital from the real economy and undermine a healthy market, creating historically unprecedented levels of inequality.
